

2007: November

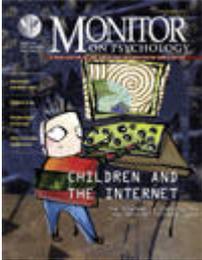

19 NEA Study: American Youth TV Habits Lower Job Prospects, Community Service (link to study)

17 NCTE's Commission On Media recognizes Florida teacher with national media literacy award (photo)

16 Media literacy is alive and well. That's my assessment after more than 100 educators attended a session I shared with two of my colleagues Friday morning at the start of the annual meeting of the National Council of Teachers of English, at the Jacob Javits Convention Center in New York City. The session covered visual literacy, wikis, and the language of film. We created a web page with our handouts and links to resources.

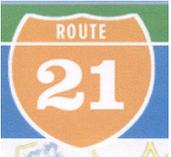

15

	I Want My iTV (Business Week) But a truly personal TV won't be coming anytime soon. While all the technology to create it is in place, players—from cable companies to film studios—can't agree on the business model to make it happen
	Wired Magazine cover story: rise of Manga in America

	Children and the Internet The Internet is changing the way American children learn It's fun, but does it make you smarter? Socially wired Creating a place for MySpace Web pornography's effects on children
---	---

9 Media fact checking on the rise: Newspaper and broadcast journalists both are becoming more aggressive in challenging false or misleading political claims, according to two new studies released Nov. 9 by the Annenberg Public Policy Center of the University of Pennsylvania.

7

	Partnership for 21st Century Skills issues new "Route21" report and recommendations
	NBC's "Meet The Press" marks 60th anniversary on air

5 Studies lay out violent TV's risk to tots Later problems found in young viewers (link to study press release)

Ed-tech groups issue urgent call to action; New report aims to spark leadership on educational technology

	Congratulations to media educator Belinha De Abreu for being profiled and recognized in the November issue of Cable In The Classroom
---	---

